The French CFA Franc has gained momentum in the last years, a major step in the efforts of the financial authorities to put it at par with the Euro. This is the first of our four special reports on currencies, commodities, stocks, and the latest innovations in the financial sector. About this publication. This article is part of our four-part special series. The series is about online trading and provides insights about the many innovative services offered by Internet based brokers. Each special report can be read independently, or as a whole if you prefer. The first part looks at the current state of the market for trading stocks. In this second part we analyze the current state of the foreign exchange market. We review the various online brokers that provide this service and explain how they work. We also discuss the advantages and disadvantages of the four most popular currencies, the Euro, the US Dollar, the British Pound, and the Swiss Franc. The third part looks at forex trading. Here we compare the best forex brokers. We also look at how the industry is evolving, and in particular at the emergence of some interesting new trading models. Finally, we discuss the wide variety of products offered by the major forex brokers. The fourth part is the most recent. In it we look at the financial sector and at the latest innovative products that are being developed. These include a forex widget and a virtual wallet for the CFA online trading application. What follows is the first part of our special series. The online stock market has become huge. There are now well over 10,000,000 individual investors actively trading. This means that not only do most of the day's trading take place online, but also that the markets themselves are increasingly made up of millions of orders. The more orders that are placed the faster and more efficiently prices are determined. Why online? As a trader you can choose to use one of the many online brokers. You can use any Internet based computer. At the time of writing this is usually via a modem or a cable. If you are lucky enough to have a high speed line, you can use that too. You can access the market any time of the day and any day of the week. There is no specific time of day when stocks are trading. You can access the markets from any Internet connected computer. At the time of writing this is usually via a modem or a cable. If you are lucky enough to 82157476af
